1. aspere (v) / aspersions (n) To asperse means to attack or criticize someone's reputation or character, often falsely. Aspersions are the slanderous or damaging remarks themselves. "The politician tried to asperse his opponent by spreading rumors about his finances." "She cast aspersions on his integrity without any evidence."
2. aspirant (n, adj) A person who has ambitions to achieve a particular goal or position; someone who aspires to something. "She is a strong aspirant for the CEO position and has been working hard to prove herself." "Many young aspirants dream of becoming professional athletes." He has a strong, aspirant will to achieve.
3. asseverate (v) To declare or assert something solemnly and emphatically. "The witness asseverated that she had seen the defendant at the scene of the crime." "He asseverated his innocence despite the mounting evidence against him."
4. axiomatic (n) Something that is self-evident or universally accepted as true; taken for granted. "It is axiomatic that hard work leads to better results in most fields." "The principle of supply and demand is axiomatic in economics."
5. assiduous (adj) Showing great care, attention, and diligence; hardworking and persistent. "Her assiduous study habits resulted in top grades throughout college." "The detective was assiduous in gathering every possible piece of evidence." assiduous reading.. assiduously: Larry Bird practice shooting baskets assiduously.
6. assonant (n, adj) (Usually assonance (n)) The repetition of similar vowel sounds in nearby words, often used in poetry and literature for musical effect. "The phrase 'fleet feet sweep by sleeping geese' is full of assonant sounds." "The poet used assonant repetition of the long 'o' sound to create a haunting mood."
7. avarice (n) Extreme greed for wealth or material gain. "His avarice led him to betray his friends for a bigger share of the profits." "The story warns against the destructive power of avarice."
8. avid (adj)/ avidity (n): avid = having a strong enthusiasm or eagerness for something. avidity = the quality of being avid; keen desire or greed. "She is an avid reader who finishes several books every month." "His avidity for success drove him to work 80-hour weeks."
